Take advantage of a rapidly growing collection of free, open-access educational materials: [http://cnx.org]

State Alumni is pleased to share Connexions [http://cnx.org]: a unique web-based teaching and learning environment that aims to change the way the world develops and uses learning materials and textbooks. Connexions works as open-source software "toolkit" to help authors publish and collaborate, instructors rapidly build and share custom courses, and students explore the links among concepts, courses, and disciplines.

Connexions is internationally focused, interdisciplinary, and grassroots organized. Millions of people from 157 countries are tapping into materials that support education in K-12, community college, university, continuing education, and industrial training settings. Volunteers are translating modules and courses into a variety of different languages, including Spanish, Chinese, Japanese, Vietnamese, and Thai. The Connexions' "toolkit" also enables anyone to create customized, high-quality print textbooks at a fraction of today's price.

Connexions' collaborators include organizations like Teachers without Borders, the AMD 50x15 Project, the University of California-Merced, the National Council of Professors of Educational Leadership, and the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation. Connexions welcomes use and contributions from everyone on any topic; for more information, see http://cnx.org.
